

Graduate Feng Shui Practitioner's Course in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia

September 15, 2005

Day 5 - Casino, Hotel, Theme Park Genting Highland

The group battled heavy traffic jams in Kuala Lumpur the previous night but finally arrived safely at Genting Highlands, a casino, hotel and theme park on top of a mountain range. Check in was at the First World Hotel.

In the early morning, we took advantage of the model of Genting Highlands available at the hotel lobby. Using this model, Grand Master Yap and Master Yap Boh Chu picked out the main points to look out for. We made our way to the Executive top floor of the Highland Resort Hotel. From that floor we could view the surrounding land forms and most of the Genting Highlands Resort area.

We were directed to take note of the Genting Hotel location as the main structure of the resort in the shape of a three leg star structure shape. All surrounding structures related to this centre point. The students were very diligent in their observations. To avoid missing out anything, we took readings of almost everything we could observe.

We then went to the Genting Hotel lobby and observed the structure of the building and the main direction of the building - Northwest. During the debriefing session, it was noted that the Genting Highlands Resort was wholly built at the top of the mountain. In basic land forms, this is actually not good as it involves fighting with the elements at all times. Yet, no one can deny the resort's success! From this first contradiction, we discovered other interesting aspects of the Feng Shui of Genting Highlands to support its success.

A residential home would never be built on top of a mountain according to Feng Shui principles. For certain types of businesses in contrast it could be beneficial to build a structure on top of a mountain.

It is in the interest of the casino that people coming to the casino get irritated and being exposed to the fight of the elements that they "lose control" of their mind. According to this they apparently spent more money, which is in the interest of the owner of the Casino. Therefore to have a casino on top of the mountain serves the purpose of the business.
