

Graduate Feng Shui Practitioner's Course in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia

September 16, 2005

Day 6 - Taman Seputeh Audit, Kenny Hills Audit

We visited an exclusive development project consisting of semi-detached and bungalow lots in Taman Seputeh. The students were given the task to select the best house to purchase and recommend changes to maximise the best possible Feng Shui of the chosen property based on a set of criteria.

Notice the hill in the back on one side of the property, in the left picture below, and the gap on the other side of the property, in the right picture below, which was sloping land. In addition on the backside of the hill is a graveyard. Would you consider living here? If you are not sure, ask a Feng Shui practitioner.

After a great lunch in Bangsar, we went to Kenny Hills to view some exclusive property land. We were assigned to choose a plot of suitable land and design a house for this land based on our own Life Gua.

After checking in into the Mandarin Oriental Hotel in Kuala Lumpur, we were informed that we have to present the reports of both locations individually to Grand Master Yap Cheng Hai, Master Yap Boh Chu and the Accredited Instructors.

It was a very interesting session as the quality of reports was very high although the time allocated to us to both prepare and present the reports was too short.
