

Graduate Master Practitioner Course Feng Shui Mastery Series in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia

October 21, 2005

Day 4 – Lecture on Health of a Dragon

Today's lecture covered the many ways to assess the "health" of a dragon. Obviously a "sick" dragon is not a place people will prosper in. We were also shown where the "crab eyes" and "prawn whiskers" were on Genting Highlands. These formations look very different when you observe them in nature and the pictures we looked at didn't quite look the same as when standing face to face with the mountains. I believe that you understand now, why Feng Shui can not simply be learned from a book. Even classics like "Entering Earth Eye", Ru Di Yan, "Snow Heart Classics", Xue Xin Fu, and "Earthly Principles Five Verses", Di Li Wu Jue, require the tutelage of an Feng Shui expert.

In case you are baffled about all this talk about fish, prawn and crabs these are just terminologies employed to aid practitioners in their observations. One clue about these "seafood" is that they, such as goldfish water, prawn whiskers, are related to water flow. It is just that lately, many Feng Shui terminologies have been taken out of context. A "dragon" obviously refers to a mountain range in the landforms and has nothing to do with a picture or a figurine of a dragon.
